WE'VE added about 3,000,000 new telephones so far this year—more than twice as many as ever before.

That's one reason why local telephone calls are up 25,000,000 a day over last year. Long Distance calls have more than doubled since before the war.

We're doing some fast stepping to meet your needs, in spite of shortages of materials.

Best of all, service has remained good on most calls, despite the large increase in the use of the telephone. There are some delays, but we'll be taking care of all of them just as soon as additional equipment can be made and installed.

BOSTONIA
O TIDINGS OF COMFORT AND JOY!

The Christmas Cover, showing the Boston University Choral Art Society in action under the leadership of its director, Dr. H. Augustine Smith, is our season's greetings to you. It is also a message of appreciation from the officers and directors of the Boston University Alumni Association for your continued loyalty to Boston University.

During this past year great progress has been realized in alumni work at Boston University. There has been a concatenation of alumni groups in many parts of the United States, and the postwar period has seen the development of additional Boston University clubs in cities throughout the country. New alumni groups are constantly being organized, and the enthusiastic response to all phases of alumni activity as evidenced in recent months has been most gratifying.

The Alumni Reunion in May of 1946 was the largest Boston University gathering ever held. More than 1,000 alumni were in attendance, filling Boston's largest ballroom at the Copley Plaza Hotel. The Boston University alumni magazine, Bostonia, continues to maintain its high standing among university alumni magazines and was recognized this year by two awards made by the American Alumni Council.

The year 1946 had its disappointments as well as its triumphs, but without doubt the trend was up. In a year when the high tension and frayed nerves of a world at war were at last released, alumni again found time to turn to their Alma Mater with pride in its present accomplishments and faith in its future. In this, the season of joy and hope, we should give thanks for the prodigious tasks which have been successfully completed and lay plans for even greater victories in the future.

Rumors appearing on the sports pages of Boston newspapers during the past few weeks have hinted broadly at the possibility that Boston University will soon graduate into the ranks of “big-time” football. How well the sports writers are guessing is a fact yet to be determined, but if their sources are in any way accurate, the report is a most encouraging omen. Dr. John M. Harmon, Director of Boston University Athletics, has promised to make a complete announcement of the new program in the near future. Until that time it would behoove the alumni to give the matter serious consideration.

In present-day America, football plays a very important part in any college or university activities program, and this is as it should be. Football and other collegiate sports—such as basketball, baseball, and hockey—provide healthy competition for the players, good entertainment for the spectators, and are the source of a wealth of fervent school spirit among undergraduates and alumni. But it is not for these reasons alone that a revitalized Boston University football program would be desirable.

That Boston University is a leader in academic achievement and educational pioneering is well-known. Its athletic program, however, has not been up to university standard to date. The time has come for us to realize that, if Boston University is to have football at all, it should develop a program commensurate with its size and prominence as New England’s largest university.

On the adverse side of the question is the unfortunate possibility that in many a college football program alumni support has proven to be a dangerous thing. In their zeal to help the coach develop a winning team, there have been those who have attempted to project the athletic program into situations which have inevitably resulted in disaster. If the football program is kept within bounds, however, there is no doubt that it can do much to enrich the life of the University for both students and alumni and for that segment of the general public who take a communal pride in the athletic achievement of any fighting football team.

From the point of view of alumni, great assistance can be rendered to increase the fighting spirit of a good team merely by getting out and attending the games. No team will play its best brand of football to empty stands. Alumni should also encourage promising players in their communities to apply for admission to one of our thirteen departments. Although this is often a sore point with the more academically-minded graduates, it should be pointed out that there need be no inconsistency between good scholarship and the ability to play football. We depend on our alumni to see that these promising young players know about Boston University.

And finally, we must count on the alumni to prevent the abuses which can very easily result from “big-time” football. Victory at any cost is a foolish maxim when it comes to athletic prowess. With a bigger and better football program in the making, let us, as alumni, realize our responsibilities and contribute our part to its success.

Warren S. Freeman
In May of 1943, Boston University, with the rest of the nation, was well into its second year of war-time living. Many changes had already taken place in the student body, the teaching staff, and the curriculum of the University, and many more were to come. At Baccalaureate that year a precedent-breaking special commencement exercise was held for thirty-five former students at the College of Business Administration who had been enrolled in the V-7 program and had been called to active duty.

One of these special degree recipients was Augustine "Gus" Gannon, Jr., who more than two years later, has returned to the University to study at the Law School. "Gus" is one of 7,069 veterans who are now included in the 20,000-odd students enrolled this year at Boston University. Even this figure of more than 7000 is not final, for the record of veteran enrollment has not yet been completed.

However, of this sizable number, 4,752 are registered as full day-time students, and the remaining 2,317, evening or part-time. In such a multitude of young people there is, of course, wide divergence in personalities and problems. Differences in age, sex, finances, and general living conditions make it impossible to select a "typical student-veteran." The story of "Gus" Gannon and his family is of interest, not because it is representative of all or even part of the huge veteran student body, but because they are just one of many families who go to make up our postwar University society.

"Gus" was commissioned in 1943 after four months training in the Midshipmen's School at Columbia University. He was assigned to the amphibious forces in the Mediterranean, returning in 1944 for the commissioning of the new LST to which he had been assigned. While in Boston he married Louise Craig, a graduate of the College of Physical Education for Women, Sargent, also in the class of 1943. He returned to the Mediterranean area on his new ship and was present on D-Day at Southern France.

"Gus" saw plenty of action during his overseas assignment. At one time the whole bow of his ship was blown off in an explosion of 500 tons of rocket bombs and demolitions. Later he and members of the crew of his LST were shipwrecked off the coast of Leghorn, Italy, where they were forced to remain for five months while repairs were being made. During his stay at Leghorn, "Gus" met Thomas Hederson, by then a major in the Army, who had been graduated from the College of Business Administration in 1940 and was one of "Gus"' best friends back in the days when they summered together in Derry, New Hampshire. Tom is also a student at the Law School this semester.

While "Gus" was overseas, Louise taught at Endicott Junior College in Beverly, Massachusetts, and later at Oguntz Junior College in Philadelphia. "Gus" returned three days after school closed, and the young couple took a long vacation together for the next month. When they returned to Boston, he reported to the Chelsea Naval Hospital as a patient for the next few weeks, during which time Louise began the long and discouraging hunt for a place to live.

It was many weeks before she finally located the tiny, one-room apartment in Cambridge which they now occupy with their four-month-old son, Craig. Although they have long since outgrown it, at the time, the apartment seemed a godsend to the Gannons. Even after "Gus" was released from the hospital and reported for duty at Camp Bradford, Virginia, they paid rent on the place in order to hold it until their return to Boston.

In January of 1946, "Gus" was relieved of active duty and in less than two weeks was back at Boston University Law School. The problem now was how he could support himself and Louise and the expected baby while carrying a full-time program. Under Public Law 346, "Gus" would receive $500 to cover tuition, books, and supplies. In addition, he would receive $90 a month as a married man for subsistence. This latter sum would cover only about half the monthly expenses he incurred as the head of a family.

"Gus" investigated and found out that a married veteran carrying a full-time program was permitted by the government to hold a part-time job paying as a maximum $110 a month. With the expense of new civilian clothes, doctor and hospital bills, an exorbitant monthly rent, the large amount of baby furniture and clothes which had to be bought, and everyday household expenses, the sum seemed hardly adequate. However, a part-time job was the only solution.

"Gus" landed an accounting position with the Sargent Studios. Every morning from 9 to 1 he reports to the office at 154 Boylston Street, and when his working day is over, crosses the Common to the Law School on Beacon Hill where his classes begin at 2 and continue through 5. His nights are occupied with studying. Life for the Gannons has assumed a regular routine which, for the most part, goes along smoothly. Louise spends her time as most young mothers do, washing, feeding, and walking the baby, cleaning their tiny apartment, and chatting with the other young matrons of Cambridge who meet daily in their walks through the park beyond Harvard Square.

The greatest problem which the Gannons have to face is housing, and in this they are but one of many thousands of veteran families in all parts of the United States. In their apartment space, which is less than twenty feet square, there is a tiny corridor, a bathroom, a living-room-bedroom (with a Murphy bed), a postage-stamp dinette, which is now used as a nursery, and a small corner called the kitchenette. Into this cramped, poorly lighted apartment, they have had to squeeze the absolute minimum of furniture including all the paraphernalia which necessarily comes with a new baby.

Rearranging the furniture in the Gannon apartment is almost a case of higher mathematics. The baby carriage has to be put in the little corridor when not in use, which almost completely blocks off the door. When the bed is down, it occupies most of the floor space in the cramped living room, which means that all other furniture must be pushed to one side. Closet and drawer space is at a premium. And yet despite all these inconveniences the Gannons pay $60 a month rent with little hope of relief in the future.

Says "Gus": "There's nothing we'd like better than a little house with a couple of acres of land, but with the (Continued on Page Twenty-Nine)
As in many colleges throughout the country, a dynamic new organization has made its appearance on the Boston University campus this year. A chapter of the American Veterans' Committee has been recognized and is now operating a full program designed to give the veteran a channel in which to use his potential influence in making the world he fought for a reality.

The purpose of the A.V.C. at Boston University, according to Gerard Craft, B'48, one of the charter members and present treasurer, is to provide a cohesive body of students who, provided with complete factual information on issues, will act as responsible students of the University and as worth-while citizens of the nation.

"The national A.V.C.,” says Mr. Craft, "is 'bottom-heavy,' in that its national policy is governed by the decisions of the individual chapters.” Arthur Lewis, B'50, publicity director, says that in following the slogan of the national group — "The Citizen, First, the Veteran, Second" — the A.V.C. here will promote intelligent thought and action on national and international affairs.

President Daniel L. Marsh and Professor Edward A. Post, CBA, are honorary members and Dr. Irving C. Whittemore, Director of the Boston University Veterans' Center, is listed as sponsor of the group which, though primarily a student organization, accepts administrative officers and University employees as members. Officers of the A.V.C. are Seymour Kaplan, B'43, SW'48, chairman; George McClatchy, Ed'47, vice chairman; William Kennedy, GC'48, corresponding secretary; and Mr. Craft, treasurer.

The Boston University A.V.C. creed lists the following aims:

1. To develop an all-University spirit
2. To replace veteran self-interest with community interest
3. To develop international mindedness
4. To promote a spirit of co-operation — by helping other groups in school
5. To extend, and inspire the democratic spirit
6. To establish a spirit of fraternity among all races and creeds
7. To create consumer consciousness
8. To foster active, thinking voters
9. To develop future community leaders
10. To run low-cost social affairs
11. To give the veteran a voice he would not have otherwise through individual action.

It is evident that the group recognizes the fact that it must fulfill a dual capacity as a college chapter of a national organization. Demonstrating that they have not ignored their responsibility to the University in co-operating wholeheartedly in extra-curricular activities, the form letter sent to potential members, explaining A.V.C., contained a Boston University football schedule.

David Rubin, B'48, former publicity director, and another charter member, says, "The group has good balance for a student veteran organization. We've got members who'll work hard to put over a school dance and then will sit down and discuss national or international affairs with the same enthusiasm.” Mr. Rubin can prove already that A.V.C. is rapidly becoming a prominent organization in the University. Early this semester, working with the assembly committee at CBA, the first football rally of the year was organized before the Tufts game. Coaches were invited to attend and featured the rally program.

Later in the year, the all-University football night was observed before the Rhode Island game with the University Council, Lock, the Inter-Fraternity Conference, and A.V.C. in charge. The A.V.C. handled the publicity, and the boys pitched in and distributed posters and handbills in all departments, secured a fire permit and sound truck for the rally, arranged the program, and spent one afternoon gathering material for the mammoth blaze which highlighted the rally activities.

Also, the A.V.C. began its lecture program for student groups at the various colleges in the University when Cord Meyer, Jr., aide on ex-Governor Harold Stassen's staff at the San Francisco Conference, spoke on "World Federation" at an assembly of the General College in early November. In addition to its regular meetings, the A.V.C. plans low-cost socials, supper dances, and forums with well-known speakers. Through cooperation with the Massachusetts A.V.C. division, the group will make other speakers available for student assemblies.

Pointing out some of its basic aims and purposes, the group, in a form letter for veterans, went on record as being in favor of "adequate financial, medical, vocational, and educational assistance which will not only be of benefit to the veteran, but also a definite asset to the community and nation.” However, the group does not approve of unwarranted bonuses and "free beer" for the ex-serviceman. They state, "In the Boston University A.V.C. you do work with those who sweated out this war with you for the legitimate right of every veteran to peace, a job, and freedom.”

After receiving their national charter and the approval of the University Veterans Committee on Student Social Activities, in August, they planned a membership campaign for the fall semester. The efficiency of that campaign has been proved already with the A.V.C. well on its way to a goal of 300 members by the end of the first semester.
In early 1939, when Dr. and Mrs. William E. Chenery presented to Boston University funds for the purchase of the Oakes Ames house on Bay State Road, which they specified was to be the future home of the President of Boston University, the Boston press applauded their generosity as a munificent gesture. Said the Boston Transcript:

"All American college presidents, it is safe to say, have roofs over their heads, but relatively few are able to live in houses compatible with their positions and with the social functions which college presidency often incurs. The Boston University president is now assured of this, and the news is cheering and welcome."

Since 1939 many hundreds of alumni have been greeted by the President and Mrs. Marsh in their Bay State Road home, described frequently as "the most beautiful house in Massachusetts." For many years the President's reception on Alumni Day was held there at which time the doors of the handsome house were open to all. Now each year at Commencement time the President and First Lady of the University have instituted the gracious practice of entertaining at dinner the members of the Fifty-Year Class who have returned to Boston for their annual reunion on Alumni Day. In May of 1947 it will be members of the Class of 1897 who will receive invitations to dine with the President at his home.

During an average academic year, President and Mrs. Marsh receive at teas, dinners, and other social functions in their home, trustees, members of the faculty, members of the University Student Council, foreign students, and countless other friends of Boston University, and also distinguished visitors from abroad. As the Transcript editorial suggested, the social duties of a college president are never-ending.

THE HISTORY OF THE HOUSE

The history of the President's house begins over thirty-five years ago. It was built by William Lindsey, a native of Fall River, who made a fortune during the Boer war by selling a patented cartridge belt to the British army. Mr. Lindsey was also a poet and a playwright. The Lindsey house might have been retained within the family if it had not been for the tragic death of Leslie Lindsey, daughter of the original owner. On April 21, 1915, Miss Lindsey had married Stewart S. Mason. On their wedding trip to England a few weeks later, both were drowned when the Lusitania was sunk by a German torpedo.

Mr. Lindsey died in 1922, and in 1927 the house was purchased by Professor Oakes Ames, Director of the Harvard Botanical Museum, and was, until 1939, occupied by him and his family. Professor Ames is the son of Oliver Ames of North Easton and Boston who was Governor of Massachusetts from 1883 to 1887. In 1939 Professor Ames sold the house to Boston University, funds for the purchase being provided by Doctor and Mrs. Chenery, at a greatly reduced price. The President and Mrs. Marsh moved into the Bay State Road residence on February 14, 1939.

A DESCRIPTION

The house, which has now become a permanent part of the Boston University Charles River campus, is one of extraordinary beauty. It is located on the westerly side of Granby Street, overlooking the Charles River, lying between Bay State Road and the River. It is a huge stone structure of perpendicular Gothic architecture, built in the style of an English castle of the Tudor period. There are twenty-six rooms and twelve baths, large groups of rectangular windows, rich oriel windows, interesting chimney treatments, and many gables. Throughout the house is found the Gothic arch of the Tudor period which is so well in keeping with the modern Gothic architecture of the new campus.

On the first floor, upon entering from the main door, is found the Great Hall from which rises a handsome staircase, elaborately carved in various floral and patterned designs. A beautiful wood paneling of imported English oak and mahogany is found in this and many other rooms in the house. At one end of the Great Hall is an immense fireplace of stone and beside it a lovely oriel window. It is in front of this window that the Marshes place their Christmas tree each year. Christmas presents are opened before the great stone fireplace, and as each present is unwrapped, the gay Christmas papers are tossed into the bright flames of the fire. Suspended from the ceiling in the center of the hall is a magnificent painted and carved lantern which Mr. Lindsey, the original Owner, brought from Arundel Castle in England too add the finishing touch to the beauty of the central room of the house.

To the right of the stairway is a door leading to the large, pleasant living room in which the Marsh family spends much time. Here, as in all other rooms of the house, is a large fireplace which bears many elaborate hand carvings among which can always be found the emblem of the rose, a symbol of the famous War of the Roses between the two houses of English royalty, York and Lancaster, which is carried through faithfully in all the molded and carved work of ceilings, cornices, and walls found throughout the house. Impressed on the fireplace in the section immediately above the opening are three medallions: in the center, a medallion bearing the seal of Boston University; on the left, one bearing the coat of arms of the Marsh family; and on the right, one bearing the coat of arms of the Seymour family of which Mrs. Marsh is a member.

Off the living room is a small den in which the President spends any spare moments he may have, reading and studying. Two of the most prominent objects in the room, which faces on Bay State Road, are the bust of Woodrow Wilson, presented to Doctor Marsh upon the completion of his term as President of the Boston Club of Rotary International, and an exquisite glass medallion designed especially for Doctor Marsh by Jay Charles Connick, internationally famous artist. In the center of the medallion, which hangs in the window in front of the President's desk, is a leaping ram, the sign of the Zodiac under which he was born. Several symbolic colors, including the Scarlet and White of Boston University, are emblazoned around the ram.

At the left front of the main stairway leading out of the Great Hall is a short corridor off of which are located the utility rooms of the house and, to the left, the drawing room. Again in this room are found the elaborate carvings on ceiling and walls, a beautiful marble mantel piece above the fireplace, and hanging from the center of the ceiling, a crystal chandelier of great delicacy and beauty. For all its exquisite elegance, the drawing room is best described as a stately and chaste room. Also on the and planning and in which she keeps her fascinating collection of bells, each of which has an interesting story.

On the wall opposite the window at the turn of the stairs is a beautiful, original oil painting, given to President Marsh, which illustrates James Whitcomb Riley's famous poem, "When the frost is on the punkin." There are many other handsome paintings and tapestries throughout the house which were brought by the President and his wife when they first came to live in the Bay State Road residence.

On the other side of the balcony is a small corridor leading to a suite of two bedrooms and a small living room. Also on the right side of the balcony is another lovely bedroom occupied at present by the President's and Mrs. Marsh's daughter, Nancy. Each bedroom has a used as a studio by Mrs. Ames, who was an artist. It was especially valuable as a studio because of a large skylight and several windows which look out on the Charles. The studio has now been reconverted to a game room and is used as such by Nancy Marsh and her friends.

Beyond the game room on the opposite side of the house is the President's study which, in Doctor Marsh's own words, is "the most perfect study a man could desire." It is built in the style of a chapel with the section ordinarily used for an altar facing the entrance to the game room door and the nave running from the front to the back of the house. There is a great groined ceiling designed in the Tudor fashion, and along the walls are long shelves of books.

Vamos a Cantar, Songs of Spain and the Americas

By Allena Luce

Some five years ago Miss Luce published a collection of songs in Spanish, seventy-five in number, which grew out of her interest in the songs of Puerto Rico. In this recent compilation she has sixty-four songs, the bulk of them Spanish or Latin-American with a section containing sixteen which have become popular in Latin America, translated from other languages. This latter group ranges from French rounds like F7ere Jacques to the German Christmas song, Silent Night, and the Russian Volga Boatman.

Among the songs from Latin America appear two Brazilian songs; the rest are from Mexico, Peru, Bolivia, Chile, Paraguay, Argentina, and Panama. The first and largest section contains songs from Continental Spain. Only three songs in this new book appeared in Miss Luce's first collection, Canciones Populares, all of them translations from some other language. And so we have here an entirely new collection of songs in Spanish and Portuguese. Some of them, like the popular Mexican Cucaracha, have appeared in other collections.

The songs of Vamos a Cantar are meant primarily for high-school and college students, but music lovers will welcome the book as a contribution to Spanish culture. Many Americans know Latin-American music only through its popular and often vulgar modern dances, but here is a book which reveals something of the folklore and culture of Spain and Latin America.

In her scholarly notes Miss Luce points out the idiosyncrasies of the music of the various provinces of Spain, and we learn that the music of the Basques differs widely from that of the Galicians. The reader is acquainted with the peculiar phenomena of cante jondo and the flamenco which flourished and still flourishes in Andalusia. The flavor of some of these songs is best rendered if accompanied by a guitar which the great composer, de Falla, once told me is considered a serious instrument in Spain.

And if the music of Spain is so distinctive because of the tremendous influence of Arabic and gypsy strains, then what of Latin-American music with its Indian and Negro factors? Of all these elements Miss Luce gives us glimpses, some short and some long. And you cannot play the accompaniments on the piano if you are merely a one-fingered expert. The rhythm of some of these pieces is baffling and requires expert handling. Miss Luce's book is a charming gesture to Spanish and to Latin-American peoples, and at the same time gives our youth an opportunity to become acquainted with one manifestation of their culture.

La Alfombra Magica

By Samuel M. Waxman

Rarely does an author's personality creep into a language textbook, and even more rarely so charmingly, as in this trim novelette about a holiday in Mexico via "The Magic Carpet." Anyone who has known Professor Waxman will recognize the sparkling "Waxmanian" touch on every page and this in spite of the fact that the story is based on a novelette in English written especially for Professor Waxman by the well-known British-born novelist, A. Hamilton Gibbs. The translation into Spanish is admirably achieved by Professor Waxman and the real flavor is his; lively, pleasing, informative and affluently human, the story takes two couples — Jack Browne and his artist-wife and an intractable Bob Wilkins and his long-suffering spouse — on a delightful and amusing trip to Mexico by auto with an enchanting young Mexican as chauffeur.

Attractive and inevitable tourist "musts" such as snow-capped Popocatepetl and Xochimilco's floating gardens are included as high spots in the engaging, fluent narrative as well as the exciting new volcano, Paricutin. The usual plethora of statistics about how many of the indigenous species have been born since 1903 with moles on their left shoulders has been rudely eschewed. The scenery these everyday tourists see, described in everyday Spanish, is "the thing." And pedants will shake their timid wattles in vain looking for the customary superarrogations of word levels and interminable questionnaires ad nauseam. The story, as Professor Waxman asseverates in his "By Way of Introduction," is untrammelled.

For those of legitimate pedagogical inclination, however, there are concatenated exercises for both conversation and composition as well as notes on idiomatic structure and suggestions for verb review. And, in addition to an ample vocabulary, both Spanish-English and English-Spanish, an extensive verb chart is appended.

A strikingly praiseworthy feature of the book is the felicitous abundance of useful idioms and, occasionally, the inclusion of slang. The whole of the language itself is never artificial, rather it flows with a very genuine Spanish taste and color. A fair majority of the pages given to dialogue — punctuated with tangy proverbs from Miguelito, the irresistible Mexican chauffeur — make the book commendably serviceable for conversational purposes. And whoever chose the photographic illustrations for the book had a conspicuously appreciative eye — not too common a panegyric applicable to makers of Spanish texts.

In peroration: I think, quite concisely, that this unusually refreshing and useful text is deserving of very grateful encomiums.

The Cherokee Nation

By Marion L. Starkey

Alfred A. Knopf, Inc. $3.50 25 Illustrations

In "The Cherokee Nation" Marion L. Starkey has resurrected a profoundly disturbing chronicle of the course of human events more than a century ago in these United States, recreating dusty historical research into a dynamic drama of present-day social significance. Her magic pen makes these long-forgotten Indian champions of democracy live and breathe and die again on the "Trail of Tears" after their long peaceful and stubborn resistance to removal ended in bitter disil—clusionment. This historical biography of the most famous of the "Five Civilized Nations" and their enforced migration westward is as fascinating as a novel and imbued with a dramatic-epic quality.

With the human sensitivity of the journalist and the scientific integrity of the historian, Miss Starkey has not merely dovetailed data from scattered records, but she has envisioned the Cherokee republic's remarkable development in the perspective of humanitarianism. She has handled a controversial episode with fairness to all, for this is no mere exposition of wrongs inflicted upon these ancient inhabitants of the southeast.

Discovering in this bitter passage of Cherokee history parallels to the Munich appeasement, the author has dedicated her book to her Czechoslovakian friends "who died on the European Trail of Tears."

There are heroes and villains in the plot and counter-plots, drama, suspense, tragedy, and at least a moral triumph, however wistful and nonretractive, in the return of a remnant of the lovable Cherokees to their native hills in the undocumented years following their government removal to lands beyond the Mississippi.

"Local interest," while centering in the Great Smoky Mountain region around the nearly contiguous borders of Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, North and South Carolina, extends over eight states crossed by the water routes of the devastating Trail of Tears on which some 4600, a quarter of the Cherokee population, perished.

Two Boston missionaries were sentenced to jail in Georgia because they would not desert their Cherokees. Half a dozen Indian boys attended the mission school at Cornwall, Connecticut. Representative Edward Everett of Massachusetts was among the congressional defenders of the Cherokees. It took many delegations to Washington, three national elections, the Georgia militia, the U. S. Supreme Court, Congress, the War Department, and some U. S. Army forces eventually to uproot the Cherokees.

Miss Starkey brings to life individual Cherokees in character portraits which form a composite gallery of their leaders: Sequoia, "one of the world's immortals," himself an illiterate whose invention of a syllabary for the Cherokee language quickened his nation to a veritable renaissance; The Ridge, who personified the indomitable Cherokee folk-spirit, his son, John Ridge, and nephew, Elias Boudinot, editor and translator, (all three of whom met assassination in Cherokee Nation West); and the patient, practical Chief John Ross. Outstanding among the American Board missionary co-actors in this historical drama are the Reverend Samuel Worcester, Daniel Butrick, Elizur Butler, and Miss Sophia Sawyer.

The reader senses the dramatic crescendo of tragedy that befell an enlightened race of red men. One wonders if there is any atonement latter-day Americans can make for the last star of the Cherokee Nation.

Eloquent in the very forthrightness of its narration, here is prose modulated to the impact of events. Marion L. Starkey not only makes a definite contribution to America — this is the "first full and fair account of one of the most terrible and moving episodes in our history," to quote the publisher's announcement in the N. Y. Times — but she has produced a literary saga.

The late Professor Dallas Lore Sharp of the College of Liberal Arts, whose student-disciples included the author and this reviewer, would be proud of Marion L. Starkey's achievement in this historical and literary masterpiece.

Reading "The Cherokee Nation" is a moving experience, like an important first night at the theatre. Indeed, the book has possibilities for screen or stage, but only if such production sticks closely to the facts, which are history, and to the spirit of the book, which recreates an epic story with a warm sympathy and understanding.

In her preface, Miss Starkey says: "As I worked, the Cherokees came forward from the past and repossessed their story — one of the great stories of American history." And so it is. Critics will add that she has written a great book about a great people, a native American people of genius.

NOTE ABOUT THE AUTHOR:

Miss Marion L. Starkey, of Saugus, Massachusetts, has traveled far, geographically, and professionally, since her student days at CLA. Besides crisscrossing this continent, she has visited Labrador, Great Britain, and the European continent, including Scandinavia, Finland, Poland, and Russia, the Mediterranean, and Czechoslovakia in 1938.

She was destined to be a writer, for all through her teaching career she has been writing for publications, including some reporting, in addition to feature articles and book reviews for the Boston Sunday Advertiser, Boston Transcript, and Boston Globe. For ten years she was on the faculty of Hampton Institute, Virginia, becoming Associate Professor of English. In 1943 she joined the United States Women's Army Corps, serving for two years. She was assigned to the O.S.S. overseas as editor and translator in North Africa, Italy, and France.

Her master's thesis at B. U., entitled "The First Plantation, a history of Hampton and Elizabeth City County, Virginia," was published in book form in Hampton in 1936. Miss Starkey has also done graduate work at Harvard University School of Education in semantics and education. She is now on the English faculty of the Fort Trumbull Branch, University of Connecticut, at New London, an ex-GI teaching fellow veterans.

Concurrent with the publication of The Cherokee Nation, an exhibition of the original manuscript, pictures, and source material was on display at the Boston Public Library October 14 through November 13.

On October 26 Miss Starkey was invited to Chattanooga, Tennessee, to plant a sequoia tree, named for the distinguished Cherokee, in the Literary Acre of the Chaptin Wild Life Sanctuary. At the same ceremony she planted a beech tree for Marquis James, author of Cherokee Strip and Andrew Jackson, and a sweet gum tree for Mrs. Coblenz, author of a children's book about Sequoia. The trees commemorate the authors for their interest in the region.

B. U. Football Has Outstanding Season

Not since that wintry Saturday afternoon in late November, 1937, when Gary Famiglietti and company set back Boston College, 13 to 6, have Boston University gridiron fans had so much to crow about as they did this fall when one of the best clubs in Terrier history pulled an almost certain loss into the tie column with just 36 seconds of playing time left.

Coach Walt Holmer's boys had picked themselves off the floor, so to speak, from the Syracuse debacle and romped over American International, Northeastern, and Tufts. That latter victory was particularly sweet revenge since the Jumbos had buried the Terriers 70 to 0 just a year ago.

This year's eleven has had first period jitters in every ball game. And it was this early play that lost the Syracuse game, scared the coaches in the three games preceding Brown, and had them talking to themselves as the Bruins rolled up 14 points in the first period.

But some unwise fellow in the stands yelled, "Well, next week we get back into the big leagues" — hinting that B.U. was a minor league club. This Brown team which had been heralded enough to stop any B. U.ites breath for a moment or two, but it took Evie Dorr's seventh point after touchdown in a row to palpitate the old ticker. This courageous lad who does nothing but kick points, since wounds received at Iwo Jima prevent his playing regularly, fully lived up to the expectations of his mentor as being a great competitor. This one conversion which will be remembered long after all others was probably the nearest to perfection that he has booted this year. It split the uprights in the middle.

Sparkplug of the club all year long has been Don Giles, triple threat from Milton, who the greater part of the season lead the Terriers in kicking, running, and passing. He has averaged better than five yards per try in rushing. His low spiral punts have carried an average of 40 yards per contest, and his passing mark is not far from the .500 mark.

Sharing honors with him in the backfield has been Ernie Zeno, the all-scholastic from Waltham. In the forward wall freshmen like Bevins at centre, Al Stewart at guard, and Wistert and Heller at tackle, as well as Anderson, Powers,

She is survived by three grandchildren, two children and her husband. Burial was at Lynn, Massachusetts.

MARY C. MELLYN

The following editorial is reprinted from the Boston Traveler where it appeared shortly after Miss Melyn's death.

"For half a century one woman more than any other was the idol and the inspiration for the women teachers of this city. Her name was Mary C. Melyn and her influence on Boston education was as deep and lasting as it was uplifting and ennobling."

"She was granted a long and professionally rich life, and the local schools bear in many deep and lasting ways the mark of her presence. Now that she has passed away, she is mourned by Boston teachers with a full measure of that love and understanding which was always the heart of her educational creed."

In the case of married veterans, the University has not been as fortunate as the University Will continue to make an effort to assist the married veteran's family problems as well as their own impossible conditions. Provision has been made for between 600 and 700 unmarried students at the present time, under the direction of Mr. Sidney Smith, University business manager in charge of dormitory and rooming accommodations for men. Facilities for single veterans have been made available in dormitories at 264 Bay State Road, 270 Bay State Road, 1557 Massachusetts Avenue, Cambridge, and 477 Beacon Street.

A Married Veteran at Boston University

The University has not been as fortunate as the University Will continue to make an effort to assist the married veteran's family problems as well as their own impossible conditions. Provision has been made for between 600 and 700 unmarried students at the present time, under the direction of Mr. Sidney Smith, University business manager in charge of dormitory and rooming accommodations for men. Facilities for single veterans have been made available in dormitories at 264 Bay State Road, 270 Bay State Road, 1557 Massachusetts Avenue, Cambridge, and 477 Beacon Street.

At present, the large apartment building at 264 Bay State Road is still occupied to some extent by persons who will not move until February 1, 1947. Gradually, however, the building is filling with Boston University students, and eventually there will be accommodations for approximately 325. By next spring there should be available all the space necessary to house unmarried men students, according to Mr. Smith.

In the case of married veterans, the University has not been as fortunate. On occasion, either Mr. Smith or Professor Warren Powell, Director of Student Counseling, has been able to locate double rooms with kitchen privileges for a veteran with a wife and child, but these occasions have been rare. However, the University will continue to make an effort to assist the married veteran-students who, in addition to their academic work, must bear the burden of financial and family problems as well as their own personal difficulties in adjusting to civilian life.

Though there is scarcely a person who is free from worry in the babel of this postwar era, few would deny that the married veteran has one of the most difficult rows to hoe in postwar University life.

which looks out on Bay State Road, and at the other end, a door leading onto a small battlemented tower from which there is a breathtaking view of the Charles River with Cambridge in the distance. Inside the President’s study is a large fireplace which makes the room very comfortable on cold winter days. Another interesting point about the room is a small flight of stairs which leads down to the second floor, saving the President the long route through the main part of the house.

On the walls of the study above the bookcases are many pictures including a very interesting series painted by a calendar artist and based on the now famous book by Doctor Marsh, “The American Canon.” The series is not complete, but it does include The Mayflower Compact, The Declaration of Independence, The Constitution, Washington’s Farewell Address, and the writing of The Star Spangled Banner.

Among the many other fascinating things about the house are the interesting collections of the President and Mrs. Marsh. In the dash in the first floor the President has on display his collection of carved owls and on the third floor, the more than two hundred walking sticks either presented to or collected by him, including those of the preceding presidents of the University.

Modern in lighting, heating, plumbing, and other conveniences, the house is also, for the most part, soundproof. It is the perfect combination of medieval elegance and twentieth century comfort. The pictures on pages 9 - 11 illustrate effectively the mellowed richness of this beautiful home to whose charms Doctor and Mrs. Marsh have added the warmth and friendliness of genuine hospitality.

Mr. and Mrs. Winburn L. Wells, of Sumter, South Carolina, have announced the engagement of their daughter, Anna Louise, to Dr. OSCAR MILTON WILBUR, JR., of Cape Cottage, Maine. Miss Wells is a graduate of Furman University at Greenville, South Carolina, and has a secretarial position with the Eastman Kodak Company at Rochester, New York. Her fiance was graduated from the University of Maine and is at present interning at the Rochester General Hospital.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. McKay, of Brookline, have announced the marriage of their daughter, Agnes, to Dr. WILLIAM SINTON of Stoughton. Doctor Sinton is an alumnus of Columbia University and is on the staff of Bellevue Hospital in New York.
