Boston University

Boston University
That statement is what every loyal Boston University Alumnus is saying right now. Why? The answer is simple.

BECAUSE his contribution is helping to build a better world — for the generations of young people who will come to our doors and to whom may be imparted knowledge and understanding of their fellow man.

BECAUSE his contribution is expressing his gratitude for the knowledge passed on to him in his student days which has aided him in becoming a better citizen.

BECAUSE his contribution is helping to make possible the growth of the Boston University campus to which he may point with pride and say: “That is my Alma Mater! That is my University!”

The 1947 Alumni Fund Roll Call campaign begins this month. Our goal is $120,000. Your contribution and the contribution of your fellow alumni will mean the difference between success and failure. We ask your whole-hearted support and cooperation.

Flash-backs to the eventful past: that solemn, joyous wedding. Your first home. Success. Then... the tranquil years.

Will you, when you retire, be free to follow the sun, to do the things you've most wanted to do?

You've taken steps, naturally, to finance this period and to make it the most deeply rewarding of your life.

But remember, all things human change. Your financial plans, your insurance program of a few years ago, may not fit your needs today, or those of the years immediately ahead. For this reason it is wise, especially in times like the present, to review and adjust your insurance program every year or so.

Your New England Mutual Career Underwriter will be glad to help. Why not call him today - just to be sure?

DR. JUDSON RAE BUTLER, who is shown on our cover, is the Dean of the General College, recently established undergraduate department. Because of the unusual nature of the General College academic program, the editors of BOSTONIA have decided to present to the alumni a detailed story on just how the General College came into being, how it functions, and how it is succeeding.

To Doctor Butler should go credit and commendation for the splendid job of organization which he has accomplished in a period of less than a year. Formerly Executive Alumni Secretary and Director of School and College Relations, Doctor Butler has given evidence of his talents for the hydra-like problems of administration in the past.

In his new position he has understood with clarity the aim, the need, and the purpose of the General College program and has proceeded to make this infant department a thriving section of the University. Plaudits also should be given to members of the General College faculty whose vision and liberal views of the function of education, to say nothing of their scope of knowledge in all fields, have contributed much to the success of the General College program.

Not to go unnoticed is the student body, a vigorous, enthusiastic group of young people who have taken to the new program like the proverbial ducks to water. General College students take pride in the fact that they are undergoing something new in education.

Orchids also to the General College office staff, under the direction of the Registrar, Mrs. A. Louise Haines, whose uniriting efforts and unflagging spirits took the General College through its first year with flying colors. This new Boston University College has made an auspicious start. We congratulate all who have made it possible.
Pioneering at Boston University

PIONEERING has always been an exciting concept to Americans whether it was in the discovery of new lands, the formation of a new civilization out of a wilderness, or the introduction of an entirely new idea into the field of education.

The founders of Boston University were imbued with this American spirit of pioneering when they first established our university. The introduction of co-education, a system frowned upon by the more conservative educators of their day, is but one illustration of their progressiveness. To the subsequent administrations these farsighted men passed on a heritage of enlightened leadership in the face of intolerance and of courage in the face of obstacles.

With the inauguration of President Marsh in 1926 the scope of Boston University pioneering efforts took on even greater proportions. Plans for the new Commonwealth Avenue campus were developed, and in 1939 we proudly viewed the construction of the first building to be erected on the site of Boston University’s permanent home, the Charles Hayden Memorial, which now houses the College of Business Administration.

Boston University’s pioneering efforts in many fields have brought to it recognition as one of the leading educational institutions in the United States. Members of our faculty and the scholars on our research staffs are daily exploring new fields of knowledge in search of facts which will some day shed light on the dark corridors of man’s ignorance and add luster to the nobility of man’s achievement.

The year 1946 saw Boston University introduce a new program, the General College, a two-year curriculum which features integrated courses in English, Social Science, Physical Science, and Guidance. At the completion of the General College course, the student is ready for transfer to any of the thirteen departments of the University or to enter his life’s work at once.

In 1946 there was also established at the University the School of Nursing, formerly a department of the School of Education, which is now offering nursing education on the collegiate level, making possible the combination of excellent hospital training and academic classroom work leading to a degree.

The beginning of 1947 saw the establishment of the new Division of Journalism as a separate University department. Boston University is the first New England educational institution to recognize the importance of training prospective members of the fourth estate in the background, responsibilities, and techniques of their profession. Now through this new division the training of journalists will take on even wider scope.

It is our hope that the pioneering spirit of Boston University will light the way for other areas of educational endeavor which are yet to be served. May the romance of striving towards the distant frontier remain with us always to serve as our guide into a future of realized dreams and ambitions.

WARREN S. FREEMAN
When the administration first announced in the spring of 1946 that Boston University was soon to add a new department to its roster, the news was greeted by the general public with a mixture of enthusiasm and curiosity. That Boston University was establishing a new college was welcome news in a year when many educational institutions were turning away hundreds of students because of the lack of necessary facilities. There were questions asked also. Was this new college to be for veterans only, and what was a general college anyway?

The educational world had greeted the announcement of the inception of the Boston University General College with an equal amount of excitement, tinged, perhaps, with a greater degree of speculation. Correlation between the various fields of concentration of a college or university curriculum was something which educators had talked about for years. The modern educational trend seemed to be toward a high degree of specialization in undergraduate work with the interdependence and relationships between the various fields left to the student to consider or ignored entirely. To the farsighted educator the fallacy in this system was obvious. There are no iron curtains between the various fields of knowledge, nor is there often a clear line of demarcation. The One World of the modern internationalist is a phrase not applicable to international relations alone.

The need for a firm foundation in a college education upon which could be built the necessary specialization of later college years and of graduate work was foreseen by President Daniel L. Marsh of Boston University. His proposed plan for a general college which would attempt to restore collegiate training to meaningful and intelligent unity was a challenging ideal which needed only the selection of the best administrator to put into practice. The man upon whom President Marsh called to initiate this pioneering program was Dr. Judson Rae Butler, now Dean of the General College.

Dean Butler, whose scholarship, administrative ability, and educational acumen, made him a most logical and fortunate choice, was Executive Alumni Secretary of the Boston University Alumni Association and Director of School and College Relations when called upon by the President to serve in this new administrative position. Dean Butler had come to Boston University as Assistant Professor of Psychology and later was appointed Professor of Psychology serving from 1927 to 1946. He is a graduate of the University of Washington, Harvard, and Boston University, where he received his doctorate in Psychology. He has written many books in his field for which he has received added recognition.

The Administration

To Dean Butler fell the task of selecting a faculty which would combine all the qualifications necessary to educators instituting such a revolutionary program. Enthusiasm, a capacity for hard work, vision, broad scholarship, flexibility, willingness to cooperate, and teaching ability were all prerequisites for a member of the General College faculty.

The men whom Dean Butler selected to head the four departments which would serve as the foundation upon which the General College curriculum would be built were: Dr. Wesley N. Tiffney, Chairman of the Science Department; Dr. Willis Wager, Chairman of the English Department; Dr. G. Norman Eddy, Chairman of the Social Science Department; and Mr. Ernest B. Walston, Chairman of the Guidance Department.

Dean Butler met with these men almost continually for the next few months, and gradually the difficulties were ironed out. It was agreed that the basic purpose of the General College, and the end towards which all efforts must be expended, was to give to students a general education in which emphasis would be placed on the relationships within and among the principal fields of knowledge, rather than upon specialized training in any one field.

Material from the four broad classifications established — Science, English, Social Studies, and Guidance — would be taught without reference to the arbitrary lines of division previously set down by educators. Dean Butler left the problem of integration within a classification to the chairman of the department and his colleagues.

Before a definite program could be set up, however, it was necessary for them to determine just what type of student would be seeking an education at the General College. One group who would surely have an interest in such a program would be the high school students who were as yet uncertain as to just where their talents might lie. Because Guidance would be an integral part of the General College curriculum, the student in this group would be aided in discovering just where his abilities lay while at the same time obtaining a solid foundation for any further work he might attempt.

Secondly, there would be those students who ordinarily enroll at a college of liberal arts with no intention of completing the four years. Some of these students find that they wish to acquire a basic education in the arts and sciences but for some reason do not wish to spend four years on this phase of their training. At the General College they would be able to gain this general knowledge in the two-year program and continue with their other plans. (As administrative plans stand now, all students who wish to go on to Boston University Law School or Boston University Division of Journalism will attend the General College first beginning in September, 1947).

The third group who could be accommodated in the General College would be the veterans — the most widely publicized students now attending the General College. During the first academic year the General College student body was 618, of which more than 400 were veterans which led to the misconception that it had been established in the interest of veterans alone. While Boston University endeavored to admit as many veterans as possible, the General College was established with an eye to long-range planning rather than a temporary solution for education-seeking ex-servicemen.

With the over-all aim and the general needs of the students now in mind, Dean Butler and his colleagues began to work out a more detailed plan. As plans for the coordination and correlation of each field was discussed, it became increasingly clear that the old method of assigning one or two textbooks for a course was outmoded. Because of the integrated nature and unique presentation of the courses, no single set of textbooks would be entirely suitable or satisfactory. Thus it was foreseen that the General College Library would occupy a central position in the curricular program of the General College. The Library would supply the students with all assigned and collateral reading material. This plan would involve the stocking of a large number of books in each of the major fields. However, with more than 600 students to be admitted in the first year, it was obvious that the library would be a place of confusion unless some cooperative plan was worked out.

Dean Butler decided, after conferring with faculty members and the chief librarian, Miss Elinor E. Day, that the General College program should be divided into a morning and afternoon session with half the student body attending classes in the morning, and the other half attending the same classes in the afternoon. This would divide the students into two study groups enabling one division to use the library facilities while the other was in class. Of course, books would be lent for overnight and weekend use also.

The Faculty

To the faculty Dean Butler left the more detailed work of integrating the subject matter of each field. He was always on hand to give advice and to aid in the correlation of the four departments. This new method of teaching, for example, the subject matter of Physics, Chemistry, and Biology as a single unit would have to be worked out first within the Science Department so as to insure thoroughness and to assemble the material in a logical order. The aim was fusion within each of the broad fields, and careful integration among all fields.

It was decided that lectures would be given by the department head in all courses to be supplemented by small conference or section meetings limited to from twenty to twenty-five students. Plans were made for visual aids, demonstration, and supplementary mimeographed material, including topical outlines, on study directives and a glossary of technical terms. When it came right down to coordinating each field, however, each department had problems peculiar to its own subject matter. Past lecture notes were of little value.

The General College Library is a vital part of the academic program.

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE DEPARTMENT

Doctor Eddy and his associates in viewing their field as a whole realized that it was in this course that the student would be given an understanding of himself as a personality and an interpretation of the society in which he lives. They realized that to the General College student, who might be planning to specialize later in but one area or perhaps to terminate his education at the General College, they must give a broad training in citizenship and social understanding. Thus the two-year Social Science course was planned to provide a study of the institutions of society historically and comparatively in order to gain a perspective and an understanding of the social forces and problems affecting contemporary society.

The chronology of the Social Science Department was not dependent upon the material in this field alone, however, for under the General College program it had to be synchronized with each of the other fields of study. This meant constant rechecking with the other members of the faculty in order to organize the material all along the line. An example of this is the problem of heredity and environment which presupposes a knowledge of the units of heredity — chromosomes and genes — and some acquaintance with such principles as Mendel’s Law. This meant that, before the Social Science program could receive final approval, it must be checked against the Science curriculum.

THE SCIENCE DEPARTMENT

Perhaps the most difficult divisions to bridge were those in the various fields of Science. In the General College Science Course it was necessary to integrate material from Biology, Chemistry, Geology, and Physics and to reintegrate the result of this fusion with the other fields of concentration in the General College program. Doctor Tiffney and his colleagues also had to consider the fact that many of their students might well go on to concentrate in one of the sciences at the College of Liberal Arts. The scope of the material was also a factor to be considered.

It was finally decided that Science would be presented in a two-year program taking its material from the fields of Biology, Geology, Astronomy, Chemistry, and Physics. The aim of the course would be to demonstrate the mutual dependence of the basic phenomena in all fields of Science. It was also kept in mind that Science does not stand by itself but is thoroughly integrated with the fields of Literature, English, Social Sciences, Psychology, Economics, History, Government, and the Guidance program.

Due to the firm belief that much valuable time is wasted by beginning Science students in laboratories, the faculty of the Science Department decided that experiments would be conducted mainly by demonstration only. If a student planned to go on in the field of Biology, therefore, a supplementary course in laboratory procedure would be suggested.

THE ENGLISH DEPARTMENT

The English Department was the field in which the correlation of work with that of the other departments seemed most desirable. Doctor Wager and Doctor Born and the other members of the faculty who would be working on the English program felt that a close linking of English and American literature and their relationship with the artistic, scientific, philosophical, and historical developments of human experience coupled with sound training in writing, which would traverse the boundary lines of subject matter, should form the basis of their program.

It was decided that the training in English would extend continuously over two years. The work during the first year would prepare the student for the kind of writing and speaking that will be required of him throughout his college career and in ordinary life situations. There would also be a survey of recent and contemporary literature. The second year, like the first, would stress composition, giving greater scope for creative and critical writing. Members of the department, with the idea of correlation in mind, would read and criticize the students’ reports and written assignments in their other courses as well.

THE GUIDANCE PROGRAM

Because of the special nature of the General College program the position of Guidance was planned as a primary part of the curriculum. Dean Butler and his associates realized that many of the students who would apply for admission would be doing so because of the Guidance factor in the program which meant that the best services possible would have to be formulated.

It was decided that the first year students would be divided into sections of twenty-five which would meet once a week for discussion of topics having common value for all students. Emphasis would first be placed on orientating the student to the concept of general education at the college level, developing the student’s powers of self-analysis, and gradually shifting to the individual’s relations with others by measuring abilities and aptitudes in regard to selecting jobs. In the second year the student’s individual problems would be considered, and those students with common interests would meet to discuss topics of particular interest to them.

The Guidance Department planned an extensive program of individual counseling so that each student would have personal analysis of his problems. Objective testing was also made an important part of the program beginning with admission tests which would serve both as an indication of where a person’s talents might lie and also to determine whether remedial work was needed in English or mathematics. Field trips, interviews with men and women who have achieved success in various fields, panel
Thus the English Department established a population of formulae of mathematics. For this reason a course of assistance in knowing how to organize was established and the results of admission tests began to pour in, the administration and faculty soon realized that many of the students, while having a high grade of intelligence, were in need of assistance in knowing how to organize their work and also in mastering or mastering for the first time the rudiments of mathematics. For this reason a course was established in Remedial Mathematics. Because the student would be absorbing a great scope of material in the scientific field, it was necessary that he have a sufficient mastery of mathematical principles to be able to concentrate entirely upon the new subject matter and not to stumble along, retarded by a lack of basic knowledge. The program was designed to provide a review of a general nature, ranging from fundamental arithmetic processes into elementary algebra with much emphasis on derivation and manipulation of formulae.

It was also realized that there are many special skills prerequisite to effective accomplishment of study at the college level. Reading, language, and thinking are closely related. If a student needed help in comprehending material read, locating information, selecting and evaluating material, or organizing and remembering material, he should be aided in acquiring sound study habits. Thus the English Department established a Corrective Reading and Study Program which would be based on the current assignments of other courses. This meant that the student would be carrying no extra burden of added assignments and would be receiving a very positive aid in his other work at the same time.

The planning and execution of the General College program was the task of the administration and the faculty, but how successful the program might be was a question that could be answered only by the students. A representative group of students was gathered together and questioned closely as to their reactions to the new type of educational program under which they were studying. Here is what they had to say:

Ambrose DeFlumeri, a veteran, now President of Student Council

I was referred to the General College by a Boston University alumnus who had heard about the new program and thought it might be just what I was searching for. My plans were to major in Sociology, and as it turns out, the General College was just the place for me to begin my training. I am getting a substantial groundwork in the physical sciences which are important to my field, and I also feel that the Social Studies program is a wonderful basis on which to build my specialized work later on. I plan to go on to the College of Liberal Arts when I complete my two years at General College.

Have I any complaints? Well, as far as I can see, the College is just about perfect, except for one thing, and even that isn’t a complaint because I can see the reasoning behind it. I would like to own my textbooks instead of borrowing them from the library, but if specific textbooks were assigned, the whole purpose of the general program would be defeated. I guess I’ll just keep on standing in line and wait until I get to the College of Liberal Arts before I start building my library.

Jean Kieswetter, Associate Editor of THE GENERAL, the undergraduate publication

I came to the General College because its program offered something which I needed badly — a general education. Before I enrolled at the General College, I was in training to be a nurse at the Newton-Wellesley Hospital. Training was wonderful for me in its practical application, but I found the studies difficult because I did not have a sound basic knowledge particularly in the sciences.

I came to the Boston University School of Nursing and talked over my problem with them. The General College was suggested to me as the best course possible for my needs, and it has turned out to be just that. I like everything about it particularly the way the library is set up. We have the advantage of several texts and can get a wider knowledge of all fields. The supplementary material which we receive from the professors is marvelous. You could almost depend on that without texts.

Oh, yes, I'm planning to go back to nursing, but this time I'll be prepared for my career!

Ann Hicks, Secretary of the Student Council

I was referred to the General College by a friend of the family who had heard of this new plan through the dean. I was all at sea about just what to choose for my college major. I thought that perhaps it might be Social Studies, but I wasn't sure. When I heard about how the General College program gave a student a comprehensive view of the Social Studies, English, and Science plus giving a detailed Guidance program, I knew this was the answer to my problem.

I was never particularly interested in Science, but the way the subject is presented at the General College makes it much more interesting to me and a lot less painful. I find that some of the material which we are given was touched upon in high school, but here you are shown how the subject matter in all fields fits into one over-all picture. I think the General College is wonderful.

Frederick W. Harrington, Jr., a veteran, member of the Student Council

In high school and preparatory school I took the college course because I knew that I would be interested in going on to Law School. However, four years of a liberal arts course plus three years of Law School seemed like a long stretch to me. I talked my problem over with one of my teachers at prep school. He began to tell me about the General College, and he was such a strong advocate of the system that he got me interested too.

When I investigated, I found that General College was just what I wanted. I would be given a good background for my Law work without being bothered with a lot of excess material which I would never use again. I feel as if I am getting in on the ground floor and working up. It's great.

A lot of people think that because there is so much work here at General College, we have to study intensely from day to day. Well, it is true that you can't let your work slip for too long, but by doing a little every day you can keep up and still enjoy college life. By the way, the notes that the professors give us are terrific. They are a textbook in themselves. If I have any complaints, they would be the number of examinations and the fact that most of the tests are objective. I would like to try my hand at more subjective tests because they are what I will probably be getting at the Law School, and I want to be prepared.

Paul MacKenzie, a veteran, member of the Student Council

I was referred to the General College by my uncle, Professor Lawrence MacKenzie, who teaches journalism at the College of Business Administration. I wasn't quite sure just what I wanted to study when I entered college. Right now I lean towards Law, and I am finding the wide scope of the Social Studies program very valuable. I do miss taking a language, however.

On this question of the library, I think the theory is perfect, but in actual practice it is often difficult to get the book you want. I agree with Fred, though, that the notes and mimeographed material we get are a tremendous help.

William Kennedy, a veteran, student worker in the Library

I am from Chicago, and when I came to Boston University, I hadn't even heard about the General College. I wanted to major in History, but I am interested in all the Social Sciences. The idea of a survey course where I could get a thorough background in all the Social Studies appealed to me, and when I did learn of the General College, I was anxious to enter.

I like the way the English course ties in with the other fields. Getting an education under this system makes you feel as though every minute of your day counts. I plan to go on to CLA for my History major, but I sure am glad that I am getting the General College foundation first.

One point stressed by all six students interviewed was the informal relationship between members of the faculty and the students. According to these enthusiastic young men and women no professor is ever too busy to talk over a problem with a student nor to sit down and just chat for a while.

Said Fred Harrington: "Where else could you just walk into the dean's office and be able to sit down and air your gripes or consult about a problem as we do at the General College? The professors here know their stuff and are so enthused about general education that we just can't help but be. We've got the best faculty in the University." And with this statement his fellow General Collegeites heartily concurred.

Student Activities

One of the reasons why the students of the General College are so enthused about their new surroundings is the very active social life which has been made available to them. Professor Donald Born is Director of Student Activities at the College and his success may be measured by the active support which he has received from the student body.

One of the first activities encouraged at the General College was the establishment of a newspaper. Professor Born called a meeting of all students, revealed that many had expressed interest in a paper, and asked that a temporary committee be selected. Seven were chosen, and they in turn appointed the editorial staff. The newspaper was named The General. It is now published once a week in mimeographed form, but plans are under way to have it multi-photographed later.

The students also felt the need of a student council through which they might speak formally to the administration and through which they could organize their social activities. There are fifteen members on the council, elected by the entire student body, four girls, and eleven men, which is approximately the proportion of women to men in the General College student body.

Other social groups which have been formed are: the Social Science Discussion Group, the Natural Science Club, the Newman Club, the Music Appreciation Club, the Reading Club, the Madrigal Singers, the Creative Writing Club, the Book Club, and the Bowling League.

It is difficult as yet to evaluate an educational program as new as that of the General College. From all indications, however, Boston University's pioneering efforts in this field show promise of reaping rich rewards. The General College is indeed a feather in our cap, and our thanks should go to President Marsh, the trustees, Dean Butler and his associates for making this visionary plan possible.
CBA Alumni Meet to Form Active Alumni Association

More than 300 alumni of the College of Business Administration gathered at a dinner meeting on the evening of February 1 at the Hayden Memorial for the purpose of forming an active C.B.A. alumni association. Speakers at the dinner included President Daniel L. Marsh, Dean William G. Sutcliffe, Alumni Secretary Warren S. Freeman, Coach Aldo "Buff" Donelli, and Harold T. Young ’27, presiding officer. Entertainment was provided by Ranny Weeks and Phil Reagan. The meeting was most successful, and it was clearly indicated that plans for a reactivated alumni association will have enthusiastic backing from the College of Business Administration alumni.

Those who helped to make this reunion a great success include: Dean William G. Sutcliffe; Francis E. Moore, ’23; Norman H. S. Vincent, ’22; Robert Chadbourne, ’39; James McDonald, ’41; George Mover, ’42; Stanley Kaplan, ’40; Robert Howells, ’45; Harold T. Young, ’27, Temporary Chairman; Rufus Stickney, ’25; Alvin S. Koppel, ’37, Carlton Chandler, ’38; Kenneth Newton, ’39; Merton Alperin, ’42; Harold Howarth, ’41; Amedee Richards, ’43; and Howard McMillan, ’46. Other members of the committee were: James McTaggart, ’38; Daniel Keeler, ’36; John Carroll, ’41; Charles Chekas, ’45; Herbert Cron, ’37; and Herbert Chaffee, ’44.

Epsilon Chapter Holds Mid-Winter Reunion

A large gathering of College of Liberal Arts alumni convened at the Hayden Memorial on February 8 to hear Mr. Waitstill H. Sharp, son of Dallas Lore Sharp, former professor at the College of Liberal Arts, speak about his year’s administration of the relief program of the agency of American Relief for Czechoslovakia, Incorporated, in Prague and Bratislava, Czechoslovakia. Mr. Sharp had just returned to the United States after twenty months in Europe.

The occasion was the mid-winter meeting of the Alumni Association of the College of Liberal Arts, Epsilon Chapter. Those present included: President Daniel L. Marsh and Mrs. Marsh, Dean Ralph W. Taylor and Mrs. Taylor, Dean Emeritus William M. Warren and Alumni Secretary Warren S. Freeman with Mrs. Freeman. The presiding officer was Professor Albert Morris, President of the Chapter.

The committee in charge of plans for the gathering consisted of: Betty Lawson Perkins, ’46; Doris Stovold, ’45, Edna Finnerty, ’41, and Mrs. M. W. Parsons, ’20, Secretary.
At the beginning of the present academic year Mr. Floyd E. Orton was appointed Acting Director of the University Libraries. This position was created to cope with the ever-increasing complexity of the University’s library problems due, in part, to the growth of the University coupled with problems arising from planning for centralization on the new campus.

Mr. Orton, a graduate of Hamline University in St. Paul, Minnesota, worked for more than a year in the John Crerar Library in Chicago, one of the outstanding scientific libraries in the world. Later he was Physics librarian of the University of Michigan for two years. He studied for his master’s degree in library science at the University of Michigan and later was appointed librarian and instructor at Eastern Oregon College of Education in La Grande, Oregon. He was a chemist in industry for four years before coming to Boston University. A member of the American Library Association and the Massachusetts Library Association, he is listed in WHO’S WHO IN LIBRARY SERVICE.

Mr. Orton has announced his objectives for the library program as follows: to aid in drawing up plans for housing the libraries to be moved to the new campus; to arrange for moving them when that time arrives; to coordinate the use of all library resources by such devices as a union catalog of all University library materials; to investigate the adequacy of our library resources for our purposes with the aid of the faculty and to make recommendations to the administration for a future library program.

He also will investigate the possibilities of cooperative enterprises for the various libraries, especially as they move to the new campus, as purchasing and cataloguing, and when it seems advisable, to put such projects into operation; he will act in an advisory capacity in interlibrary problems; he will be the University’s representative to the library profession and to the public on library matters; and he will gather information pertinent to Boston University’s library problems, organize it, and present it, when it seems advisable to those to whom it might become useful.

Mr. Orton has also set as an objective the need of keeping informed of, through appropriate faculty committee membership and advisory service to the administration on library problems, the University’s future plans and to recommend a library program commensurate with our teaching program. He also wishes to plan for an eventual coordinated University library service to be centered in a University Library Building on the new campus. This new building should be designed to meet the needs of a carefully planned library program based upon the educational objectives of Boston University.

The Warren Collection

This item inaugurates a series of articles in which we will pass on to the alumni information concerning unusual gifts to the libraries, new trends in library service which may have a bearing on Boston University problems, and other news items that may be of interest.

Recently the family of President William Fairfield Warren presented to Boston University a collection of President Warren’s correspondence with many of the outstanding educational, literary, and political figures of his day.

The collection has considerable historical value for in it are letters from men and women who were instrumental in founding Boston University. The correspondence is of great worth biographically because through the letters of many of the great scholars of the day is revealed the esteem in which President Warren was held particularly because of his research in Oriental religions. William Gladstone, the great English prime minister, for example, was one of the many famous persons who corresponded with President Warren on this subject.

President Warren is also revealed as a sympathetic listener to those who sought his advice in a letter written by a Frank W. Gunasale in the year 1879 appealing to President Warren for guidance. Unfortunately, President Warren’s reply to the young man is not included in the collection. At present, the library does not have available many examples of the President’s handwriting as the letters in the new collection are those which were sent to him.

In general the material may be broken down into groups as follows: the Boston University group, including letters from Augustus Howe Buck, William and Mary B. Claffin, Borden P. Bowne, and many others; presidents of universities, including F.A.P. Barnard, who wrote six letters concerning the education of women; Charles Eliot of Harvard, who discussed controversial subjects of the day, Francis R. Walker of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, W. Dewitt Hyde of Bowdoin, Arthur T. Hadley of Yale, D. C. Gilman of Johns Hopkins, James McGosh of Princeton, J. B. Angell of the University of Michigan, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Durant, the founders of Wellesley.

College, who wrote several letters about Wellesley affairs (President Warren was a trustee of Wellesley College), and Richard H. Dana, who discussed the New England Conservatory of Music of which President Warren was also a trustee.

Other groups into which the collection has been divided are: Methodist bishops of President Warren's era including Bishop Simpson who delivered the eulogy at Abraham Lincoln's funeral; prominent Boston clergy such as Phillips Brooks, Edward E. Hale, George A. Gordon, Joseph Cook, James Freeman Clarke, and Austin Phelps. The literary group contains letters from such famous figures as Bronson Alcott, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Sr., William D. Howells, T. W. Higginson, G. W. Curtis, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, Horace N. Furness, Antén Lang, W. J. Rolfe, and many others.

Also in the collection are letters from famous political figures including Henry Cabot Lodge and Wendell Phillips and correspondence from such notables as Alexander Melville Bell, father of the inventor of the telephone who was also a professor at Boston University, Robert Todd Lincoln, son of Abraham Lincoln, William Lloyd Garrison and others. The famous women of President Warren's day are also represented in this collection which contains letters from Lucy Stone, Abby W. May, Laura Bridgman and others.

Nor are all the letters from outstanding American men and women alone. President Warren corresponded frequently with famous English scholars at Oxford University, and as has been mentioned before, with the famous Mr. Gladstone himself, who wrote on the traditional Downing Street stationery. Another famous English correspondent of our first Boston University president was the renowned Victorian poet, Matthew Arnold, whose stationery bore the stamp of the exclusive Athenaeum Club of London.

The General College in Radio

On Monday, February 3, listeners in the Boston area heard a new type of radio program, "We Human Beings," a discussion of the nature of man as determined by his heredity and his environment. The program was of particular interest to Boston University because the participants are members of the General College faculty.

Appearing on "We Human Beings" which can be heard over WCOOP at 8:15 on Monday and Wednesday evenings are Dr. G. Norman Eddy, social science; Dr. Wesley N. Tiffee, natural science; Dr. Willis Waster, the humanities; and Professor Ernest B. Walston, guidance. Although they do not take part regularly, Dr. Judson Rae Butler and Professor Donald Bohn will appear on this series from time to time. While "We Human Beings" is primarily a Boston University program, guest authorities from other colleges and universities will be invited to enter the discussion with the General College panel when the topic centers around their particular area of information.

One of the points commented on by listeners to the programs is the delightful sense of informality. Each broadcast seems more like a friendly conversation than an "educational" program. In truth, this result was not easy. In cooperation with the Lowell Institute Cooperative Broadcasting Council and the University's Bureau of Publicity, plans for these programs were started in November. From all the six cooperating colleges and universities, the General College was chosen because it was believed the integrated courses would afford the best radio material.

Happily, the faculty possessed the rare combination of personality, information, and good voices required for a top-flight radio performance. Test programs were recorded and rerecorded in an effort to find a suitable approach to the subject and the right combination. With the professional aid of the Lowell Institute radio directors, and station personnel, the program was whipped into shape. If early response can be an indication, "We Human Beings" is proving that educational programs can be entertaining, too.

Law School Celebrates 75th Birthday

The landmarks of history are famous names, dates, events and places. Boston University School of Law, established by vote of the University trustees 75 years ago has all four.

The Boston University school, with its establishment in 1872, broke all existing law precedents by standardizing requirements for legal practice in the United States. Upon its opening it became the first law school to require an admission examination, a practice which was followed four years later by Harvard in 1876-77 and a year after that date by Columbia in 1877-78.

The Boston University Law School can also claim the credit of being the first law school in the country to establish a three-year course in instruction. A survey of the law schools of the nation, made just prior to the opening of the Boston University School of Law in 1872, reveals that 12 schools in the United States had courses of one year's duration; two had courses of a year and a half, and the remaining 17, only two-year courses.

The school, which started under the guidance of the Honorable George Stillman Hallard, contemporary and friend of men such as Longfellow, Holmes, Everett, Winthrop, Bancroft, Webster and Choate, had a first enrollment of approximately 60 students. Today the figure has risen to 875 day and evening students.

When it opened, the Boston University school was one of the few in the country admitting women students. The first woman graduate, Lelia Josephine Robinson, completed studies in 1881, but since no other women were members of the Massachusetts bar, it took an act of the legislature to make her admission possible.

Since her time other women graduates of the School of Law have been responsible for equally important legal precedents. Judge Jennie Loitman Barron, graduated in 1913, became the first woman lawyer in Massachusetts to present evidence to a grand jury; Judge Emma Fall Schofield, '08, was the first woman commissioner in Massachusetts, the first woman Assistant Attorney-General of this Commonwealth, and one of the first two women to be appointed to a judicial position in New England. This latter honor she shared with another Boston University law school alumnus, Judge Sadie Lipner Shulman, '11.

The famous names who have guided the school start with that of the first dean, the Honorable George Stillman Hallard and continue to that of his present head, Dean Elwood H. Hettick. The names, however, are not limited to those who have guided the school as deans and faculty members for the past 75 years, but include hundreds of its alumni. Men such as the Honorable Owen D. Young, '96, distinguished financier; the Honorable David I. Walsh, '97, former senator from Massachusetts and former governor of Massachusetts and the Honorable J. Howard McGrath, '29, United States Senator from Rhode Island, Rhode Island's former governor, and also formerly Solicitor General from the United States, are among the hundreds of its graduates who have reached top positions.

To give a complete picture of the service of Boston University Law School graduates to their country, the list of distinguished names would have to include the 10 men who later became governors of New England states; nine graduates who were made college presidents; nearly 575 representatives, senators or others in similar fields of political life; more than 500 judges and 49 United States district attorneys and assistant district attorneys. More than 100 others later became mayors of New England cities and nearly 200 professors in colleges throughout the country.

A partial list of nationally known living alumni includes in addition to the Honorable Owen D. Young, Senator Walsh and Senator McGrath, men such as the Honorable Harry K. Stone, '16; the Honorable J. Rogers Benton, '11; the Honorable Charles A. Rose, '26; Edward C. Stone, '00; the Honorable Henry T. Lummus, '97; Guy W. Cox, Esq. '96; the Honorable Louis S. Cox, '99; the Honorable Paul A. Dever, '26; the Honorable Felix Forte, '16; the Honorable Daniel T. O'Connell, '10; the Honorable Frank Tomasello, '21; the Honorable Charles H. Donahue, '80; the Honorable Frederick W. Mansfield, '02; the Honorable Matthew F. McGuire, '26; the Honorable Olin M. Jeffords, '18; the Honorable James J. Ronan, '10 and Melvin Maynard Johnson, '95.
A Tribute to Dean Homer Albers

Boston University sustained a serious loss in the death of Dean Emeritus Homer Albers, which occurred on the ninth day of January, 1947.

Boston University School of Law has been fortunate in its Deans. The honorable gentlemen chosen from time to time as chief executives of our Law School have always been men who were strong in mind, with cultured personalities, and complete masters of the subjects which they taught.

Homer Albers was born in Warsaw, Illinois, on the 28th day of July, 1863. He was the son of Claus Albers and Rebecca (Knoop) Albers. He was educated in the public schools of Warsaw, Illinois, and received his Bachelor of Arts degree and his Master of Arts degree from Central Wesleyan College, Missouri. His pastor was a graduate of Boston University School of Theology and was so enthusiastic about his alma mater that it was only natural for this ambitious young college graduate, who wanted to be a good lawyer, to seek his professional training at Boston University School of Law.

He was graduated from Boston University with an L.L.B. degree magna cum laude in 1885. He never left the school, remaining after his student days on the faculty, with every rank from instructor to Dean, which position he held from 1912 to 1935, and since, 1935, Dean Emeritus. In 1922, Dean Albers was honored with the degree of Doctor of Laws, from Central Wesleyan College.

He married Minnie B. Martin on June 26, 1899. She died May 25th, 1914. On September 16, 1916, he married Katherine Ramsey of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and that marriage was blessed with three children, Elisabeth Ramsey Albers, William Edward Albers, and Robert Ramsey Albers. His home life was happy and ideal. He was a devoted husband and father.

Since his graduation from Boston University, he practiced law in Massachusetts. In addition to his connection with Boston University, Dean Albers lectured on law at Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He was a member of the Massachusetts State Ballot Law Commission from 1899 to 1905, and a member of the American, Massachusetts, Boston and Norfolk County Bar Associations. He was President of the Norfolk County Bar Association, and a member of the American Law Institute. He belonged to many clubs, including the St. Botolph, Beverly Yacht Club, Marion Tennis Club, Kittansett Club, and others. He enjoyed travelling, and his many trips with Mrs. Albers included visits to Europe, Africa, the West Indies, and the Pacific Coast.

Dean Albers was a great lover of the common law, and of lawyers in general. He threw his whole soul into his lectures, enlivening them with anecdotes and practical suggestions from his own great experience as a lawyer. He regarded the students as his companions. No student ever came to him, either before or after his graduation, with any problem Dean Albers could solve, without having that problem solved as speedily and sympathetically as possible.

He devoted much of his time to the development of the Boston University Law Review, which was started in 1921. Feeling as he did that graduates of the Law School should be good trial lawyers, he was keenly interested in the use of the Moot Court in our Law School by the students.

He considered each of his pupils as his own child. His interest in his students followed them throughout their lives. Dean Albers took personal pride and satisfaction in the achievements of any of his students who would be elected or appointed to public office or selected for appointment to the bench of any Court in the country. In such cases, he would be as happy as if it had been his own child; he never tired of boasting of the achievements of his graduates. At meetings of the Alumni Association he was called "Our Dean," and he always referred to the law students and alumni as "my boys and girls."

Several times he refused appointment to the bench, preferring to devote his time and energies to his practice and to his work for Boston University School of Law. Those of us who attended the Law School while he was Dean will always remember his genial spirit around the school, his untiring energy, and in the lecture hall, his inexhaustible supply of legal knowledge, speaking from his own great experience. He was always aggressive and resourceful. When the standards for admission to the Boston University School of Law were raised in 1923, the effect was to cut down the number of students; and Dean Albers said: "The country needs more good lawyers rather than more lawyers."

The love and devotion in which he was held by his students is best expressed by the students themselves, in the issue of "The Brief," published by the School of Law in 1929, which was dedicated to Dean Homer Albers, as follows: "Our three years have kept us in contact with a man whose sterling qualities as a teacher and friend have commanded our honor, respect and appreciation. Our otherwise happy commencement is saddened with the realization that we shall no longer feel the paternal guidance of the 'Happy Warrior,' Dean Homer Albers."

"The Brief" issued by the School of Law in 1931 was also dedicated to Dean Albers by that class as follows: "To Our Dean: With the wisdom of rich experience, wedded to the spirit of eternal youth, have you guided us through the neophytic years of our legal careers. Intensely human, keen, sagacious, humanitarian, you have meant much to us. Always have you been ready to serve the best interests of your 'boys and girls.' Now, as we leave, we want you to know that we have not forgotten, nor can we ever forget, all that you have done for us. We owe much to you, our own Dean Homer Albers."

A committee to erect a permanent
The New University
Admissions Program

In stride with major advancements now under way in all parts of Boston University, President Daniel L. Marsh has announced that four administrative offices will be headed by Doctor Kenneth L. Heaton, newly-appointed Dean of Admissions and Examinations at Boston University.

President Marsh states that the new offices are a "contribution to administer efficiency to the University, one of the most plainly marked milestones of progress in the academic administration of Boston University." These offices are: the Office of Admissions, the Office of School and College Relations, the Office of Statistical and Research Service, and the Office of Counseling Service.

"With the tremendous influx of students demanding a college education," Doctor Marsh continued, "we feel that such an organization as we have set up here is an absolute must for obtaining any kind of efficiency in accepting, training, and guiding students into the educational channels which will be of the greatest possible future use to them. At the same time, we are increasing the quality of service we can render to the community."

The purpose of the first of these departments, the Office of Admissions, will be, briefly, "to handle everything from the first contact with a student who applies for admission to the University, to the point where the student is definitely accepted and ready to register for courses." Functioning as a coordinated planning center to determine the criteria for student selection, it will combine all the processes of fact-gathering for purposes of student selection; it will conduct interviews with prospective students and schedule interviews with the faculty of the University; it will direct examination centers and certify applicants to the colleges to which they are to be admitted.

"At present," stated Doctor Marsh, "the activities of this organization will function for the undergraduate colleges of Boston University: the College of Liberal Arts, the College of Business Administration, the College of Practical Arts and Letters, the College of Music, the College of Physical Education for Women, Sargent, the General College, the School of Nursing, and the new Division of Journalism. However, further plans are already in progress to pull in the graduate and professional colleges of the University."

Activities of the Office of School and College Relations will consist mainly of field work, concentrating on new and better services which the University can render to schools and colleges in the New England area through means of high school testing, visits, assembly talks, guidance conferences, and informational and promotional activities.

As its name implies, the Office of Statistical and Research Service will be composed of a "group of experts to assist administrative, instructional, and research programs in all departments of the University through machine services, test development, cumulative records, and other related services. Concurrently, it will conduct follow up studies on student selection, counseling, and other field services." In view of the importance placed on these services, President Marsh has appointed a special committee, composed of Dean William G. Sutcliffe, Dean Chester M. Alter, Dean Judson Rae Butler, Dean Donald D. Durrell, and Doctor Heaton as Chairman, to develop detailed plans for the full utility of this new department for the coming year.

School of Education Students Establish Newspaper

The B.U. School of Education newspaper, The B.U. Educator, first came into being on November 22, 1946, at a Student Council meeting. The idea was originated by George MacClatchy, a senior at the School of Education, who thought that a school paper would be an ideal way to promote school spirit and develop an interest in the affairs of the School of Education.

Washington, D.C.

The Boston University Club of Washington held a meeting in the Queen Elizabeth Room of the Hotel Raleigh in Washington on the evening of February 5. A large number of alumni were present to greet President Marsh who was the main speaker of the evening. Prior to Doctor Marsh's talk an organization meeting was held and the following officers were elected: President, Raymond J. Queenin, B'24; Vice-President for Membership, Julian Lakey, A'21, G'22; Vice-President for Programs, James T. Gearon, E'26, '28; Vice-President for Publicity, Roberta Broner, B'46; Secretary, Kenneth Reardon, A'35, G'41; Treasurer, Barbara Hall, Sar'36; Executive Committee, the officers and Senator Howard McGrath, L'29, Hon'43; Representative Dewey Short, T'22, Hon'41; and Judge Matthew F. McGuire, L'26.

At that same Student Council meeting the new paper was heartily approved by all present, MacClatchy being named chairman of the committee, and Miss Ida Johnston being named as advisor.

The first issue was published December 11, 1946, only nineteen days after the idea was put forth.

The first two issues were in mimeographed form, but starting with the third issue the paper was published in Print Photo-Offset form. Though the first two issues were distributed free of charge, the later editions will be sold at the rate of nine issues for one dollar, with a special subscription price of sixty cents for students.

The Editor-in-Chief is George Van Horn, and the associate editors are Dolores Rogers, Katherine Bailey, Russell Howard, James Burns, and Al Bradley. Van Horn, Miss Bailey, and Burns were editors of mimeographed papers while in the armed services, and Bradley was editor of a photo-offset paper, so the staff is well supplied in the matter of experience.

The purpose of the paper is to develop greater interest in extra-curricular activities, to develop more spirit in the School of Education student body, to keep the students informed of current topics pertinent to the teaching profession, and to keep alive and originate movements for the improvement of the position of the teacher.

BOSTONIA
How much does the telephone company earn?

We asked a number of people this question . . .
"How much would you say the telephone company makes (after all expenses and taxes) on the money invested in the business?"

Twelve per cent said "6% or less."

Eleven per cent said "7% to 10%."

Twelve per cent said "15%, 20% or 25%.

Eight per cent said "30% or more."

Fifty-seven per cent had no opinion.

The actual figure is less than many people think. Even with telephone calls at a record peak, Bell System earnings on the money invested in the business have averaged only a shade over 5½% for the last five years — including the war years. And that's not enough to insure good telephone service.

We thought you might like to know in case you have been wondering about telephone earnings.
The Placement Service, 711 Boylston Street, Boston 16, Mass., Com. 0201, welcomes applications from alumni who are qualified and interested in these and other positions. These positions were open at time of submission to "BOSTONIA", however, there is no assurance that they will be open upon publication. Registration with the Service will place you on the active list for employment assistance.

College of Liberal Arts
Class Report

So far, sixteen of our class of thirty-nine members have said that they intend to come to our fiftieth reunion. I am sure that there will be others who wish us who have not yet written. We are certainly doing well for "septuagenarians!" MAE HEPWORTH writes from Branford, Connecticut, that she and her husband are planning to attend. Last year was Mr. Phelps's fiftieth reunion at Harvard which both enjoyed very much. Maude has never been to one of our reunions. It will be good to see her again and to meet Mrs. Phelps. ESTHER DODGE wrote on December 31, a resolution kept before the New Year dawned. She says: "I have taught the required number of years of Civics in the Cambridge High and Latin School, though I hesitated in giving the subject, 'Civics,' considering the present condition of the world. I retired in 1944. While I was teaching I had one free period a day, but since then, I haven't seen it! Teaching was mostly fun and there was fun, too, in a number of trips and in part of every summer spent in the mountains. Of course, there has been some church and Sunday School work, with special interest in being responsible for correspondence with the men and women in the service in both wars." Esther and her sister live at 15 Cottage Street in Cambridge. Since Esther is on the committee arranging for our class luncheon, I am sure that we shall see her on May 24.

The following letter is from ELIZABETH PUTNAM CLARKE, another committee member:

'Dear Classmates:

The 'short and simple annals' of the septuagenarian try that one on your typewriter — may be interesting to those of like age so here goes. But I am hearing in mind a recent letter from GRACE LORING BERNSTROM in which she says she is 'allergic to biographies' and will make it brief.

"I still live in Lynn, though I do not think a bronze tablet will ever adorn my birthplace, for my interests are the average kind. The advancing years have given me more leisure for reading and I am catching up on American History, courses sadly lacking in the B. U. of our day.

"The Lynn Historical Society offers me plenty of outlet for that enthusiasm. Then, during the war years, a large and active surgical dressing class connected with my church, the Universalist, took two days a week.

"The paper drives in Lynn finally got the last of my college notebooks, saved all these years for sentiment, I guess. I didn't know I ever knew so much.

"A retired, but not retiring, husband joins me in the social activities our city offers, and Boston's musical attractions, and now that gasoline is no longer restricted we have toured New England. Criss-cross, and up and down, renewing our acquaintance with beloved mountain trails inaccessible during wartime to 'A' card holders.

"Since we have no children and grandchildren to watch grow up, we have followed with particular interest two grand-nieces in England, my husband is English, whom we invited to come and live here during the war. However, they stuck it out in England and now, the older girl is at college in London. She writes that her college King's College — was blitzed badly and that they have very little equipment in their laboratories and no libraries but things are improving gradually. The letters sound so much, except for these references, like our experiences of fifty years ago, with anxiety over exams, parties at the college, and the many city attractions that London offers, even as Boston did to us, that I find myself in a reminiscent mood, and murmur, sentimentally, 'college from which my feet have strayed, but not my heart.'

"Till we meet, next May,'

College of Liberal Arts
Reunions

The Class of 1906 of the College of Liberal Arts met twice during the past year — in the spring and late fall. Miss RUBY H. COLE, who is Secretary of the class, sent in the following report of the two meetings:

"The close of the fourth decade since its graduation found the class very much alive and very eager to meet the friends of whom they have grown fonder year by year. Twenty-nine members and friends met for luncheon at the College Club on May 25, 1946. Animated greetings and reminiscences made a continuous obligato for every minute of the reunion. President CLARENCE B. HILL presided over a business meeting. As Class Agent he reported that the class has, during a period of years, now contributed $1,216.50 to the Alumni Fund Roll Call. This is exclusive of extremely generous sums subscribed by our two members who are trustees and one who is on the faculty.

"ESTHER WILLARD BATES read the special anniversary poem she had been persuaded to write. Her allusions to classmates and her apt characterizations of professors produced gales of laughter. (The editors of BOSTONIA regret that due to space limitations we are unable to reprint Miss Bates' very amusing poem, but we will forward on request a copy of the poem to any member of the class.)

"We were especially glad to welcome far-away members. LAURA SARGENT McGOWEN from Allentown, Pennsylvania, told modestly of her duties as a busy pastor's wife. OLIVE COOPER WILBUR had flown from Reading, Pennsylvania, just to be with us. We were particularly glad to have with us again FRANCESCA SHERRILL WILLARD with messages from her husband, Fred, who is so bravely bearing his long illness. Those who had traveled told the stay-at-homes of their journeys: EMMA FALL SCHOFIELD of flying to California, and the HILLS and the HEARDS of trips to Florida.

"Messages from those unable to attend were read. There was a delightful news letter from RACHEL BESOM LADD, telling of her life as a busy wife and mother and of her community interests. HARRY MACLEAN, The Reverend John H. to the world, is now President of the Connecticut Council of Churches; he regretted that he was unable..."
to come. MARGARET SHIRLEY TURNER sent greetings from a half-way point on her trip to the far West.

"Members of the class who are no longer with us include: ELISIE BURDICK SERPLE, who died in 1938; GRACE HOOPER HALL, to come. MARGARET SHIRLEY TURNER WILLIAM WILLIAMS, CAMILLE WHEELÈE WADSWORTH, OLIVE COOPER WILBUR, COLE, SUSAN TIDD and WALTER HEALD, with us include: ELSIE BURDICK SERPLE, sent greetmgS from a half-Way POlnt On her FIELD, FLORENCE HEATHèf WILLIAM DER, ALICE PERKINS, HAZEL PURMORT, CLARENCE and MARIE HILL, MARGARET ESTHER BATES, FLORENCE BURT, RUBY in Piedmont, Califomia, met With us for the gathered.
